

We support a rights-based economic model in advocating for economic, environmental, and social justice. A rights-based economy is an economic system that prioritizes the protection and promotion of individual and collective rights. To achieve this, we advocate for the enactment of the following principles that ensure the recognition and protection of these rights.

- The cessation of the exploitation of our natural resources,
- Respect the natural environment by preserving ecosystems needed for sustaining future generations,
- An equitable approach to economic development that prioritizes ecological sustainability and human well-being in regards to our natural resources and environment.
- A balanced approach to economic growth inclusive of one more ecologically sound and human-centered in relation to our natural resources and environment,
- Equity in participation and ownership of our natural resources,
- Supporting community power versus the status quo or corporate power,
- Reclaiming the power of citizens through economic democracy.

We believe that through the avenue of equitable and sustainable use of our natural resources, these are achievable for the empowerment of all Bahamian citizens.
